Read More Read Less Last Updated on July 21, 2022 You've given birth to your little one, and it's been 3 months, now entering the 4th one. As your baby grows and emerges from the haze of the newborn stage, you'll notice that she's becoming more active. Sure, she won't be crawling or pulling up on the table causing mischief by 4 months, but she'll be engaging with you on a more profound social and emotional level, and she'll be able to move her body with more intent and purpose. If you're excited just seeing your baby stare curiously at you, you'll be glad to know that this is a ripe time for learning. The correct activities and teaching methods will skyrocket your baby's cognitive, emotional and physical development. This is the time to engage and play with your child as much as possible. Simply getting down on the floor — or at least getting eye to eye with her — and playing can help push your growing infant in the right direction. In early childhood, play and learning are synonymous. Playing peekaboo or imitating facial expressions, for example, can help your child explore and interact with the world around her. Let's learn more about activities that are safe and suitable for your baby to engage in at this stage and things to avoid while playing games with your little munchkin. What You Should Expect From a 4-Month-Old Child If you're wondering what your little one is capable of doing at this phase of time, here's what you must know — Facial Expressions: Your little one is able to identify the faces of his caregivers, including yours. They can also gauge expressions. Colours: He can differentiate between bright shades of colour such as orange and red. Bright colours will charm your little one at this point. Rolling Around: All that crawling transitions into rolling around this phase. Your baby will be getting plenty of tummy time and exploring his surroundings, shapes, colours, touch, and textures. Social Bugs: Your baby's babbling will improve as he learns new words and syllables. You may find yourself dealing with a chatty critter, and that's a good thing. Avoid placing any sharp object around the baby. Because you will be playing with your little one, ensure you wear comfortable and soft clothes that do not prick the baby or get stuck anywhere. Make sure your pockets are empty. Many a time, parents forget to do that and end up hurting the baby or themselves. Never let the baby go out of sight. Keep only the toys that are not choking hazards. We have listed down some of the best and most suitable activities that your 4-month-old baby can enjoy. Also, the requirements are methods — how to play with a 4-month-old baby are also mentioned to ease the parenthood. Reading is a fun activity that boosts your little one's imagination and vocabulary. It's never too early to read to a child, and here's what you must know. Skill Development: Cognitive What You Will Require: Well-illustrated picture books How to Do It: Get a broad book with big colourful images and illustrations, and dive right into the story. Encourage your little one to touch and feel the book. Your baby may have a short attention span and jump to the next page. Even a few seconds of seeing counts, and it's normal. Be expressive, use gestures and explain in an entertaining or storytelling way. 2. Talk to Him Talking to your babbling baby is one of the best surefire ways to help him learn the nuances of language and master babbling better. Here's how you can do it. Skill Development: Cognitive And Motor Skill Development What You Will Require: Some lone time with your little one (a few minutes) How to Do It: Put your four-month-old on tummy time for a few short minutes or seconds every now and then to develop the back and neck muscles. Make sure your short intervals of tummy time add up to roughly an hour a day. Speak out the names of objects around you and make funny faces to encourage the baby to babble or giggle. You can try making animal noises, or funny cartoon sounds too. Take it up a notch by tickling his feet or tummy. Letting your four-month-old play with colourful toys on a play mat is a great way to introduce him to the world of textures. The baby will touch all his toys and even be introduced to the cause of his actions. For example, he will know that an object goes far away when he throws it away. Skill Development: Sensory development and understanding of cause and effect What You Will Require: A few toys or household objects How to Do It: Get some pillow or cushion covers and mats with textures such as velvet and wool. Let your little one touch and feel the different fabrics. Grab a couple of age-appropriate toys which are not choking hazards and let your child fiddle with them. Toys such as rattles, bouncy balls and action figures will also help them understand the meaning of cause and effect. Exchange toys to and fro and consider buying an activity gym for more fun and exploration. 4. Look at The Mirror Looking at himself by staring at the mirror has an appealing charm and joy very few can explain. Skill Development: Social and motor skills. What You Will Require: A mirror at her eye level which is unbreakable. How to Do It: Leave your little one legging behind or taking some extra time to learn new things, do not fret. Not every baby is the same, and everyone develops at a different pace. Be gentle, be kind and give plenty of time and room for your child's development. The important thing is to keep exposing your baby to different developmental activities and letting him have fun since that's what speeds up cognitive, emotional and social growth.
